

10. Correct. The answer is false. The strong nuclear force, which holds the nucleus of the atom together, is one of four fundamental forces. The other three are the weak nuclear force, which controls the radioactive decay of beta particles, the electromagnetic force which hold neutrons in their orbits and is the force that attracts oppositely charged particles and the repulsion of like charged particles, and gravity which is the attraction between the masses of objects.