

8. Correct. The answer is true. About one third of the world's electricity is generated by coal and about half that amount is generated by nuclear and by gas, less than half that amount is generated by oil, and somewhat over half that amount is generated from renewable energy sources - mostly hydro power. Coal accounts for around 25% of total energy consumption.