

28. Incorrect. The answer is false. A cross price elasticity of demand tells us how the quantity demanded of one good changes when the price of another good changes. A positive cross price elasticity of demand implies goods are substitutes. If the price of one of the goods goes up, people consume less of that good and also less of the complement good.