

6. Correct. The answer is true. Indirect taxes or taxes on products usually distort market efficiency. They typically raise consumer price and reduce the quantity produced below the most economically efficient level of output, which maximizes consumer plus producer welfare.