

1. Incorrect. The answer is true not false. In the past decreasing costs gave the largest company the lowest units costs, which implied that there should be one company in the market. Economies of scope also could contribute to a firm being a natural monopoly.