

2. Correct. The answer is false. Utilities were traditionally vertically integrated with the same company owning generation, transmission and distribution with exclusive franchise over a given area. The amount of horizontal integration varied by country and the size of the market.