

13. Correct. The answer is true. Although all countries have an independent transmission grid with third party access and all allow independent generation, the UK has gone the furthest of the 4 towards privatization. New Zealand, Norway and Sweden all still have capacity in state owned corporations involved in the electricity supply system.