

13. Incorrect. The answer is true not false. Although all countries have an independent transmission grid and allow independent generation, the UK has gone the furthest of the 4 towards privatization. New Zealand, Norway and Sweden all still have more substantial capacity owned in state owned corporations involved in the electricity supply system.