

27. Correct. The answer is true. Typically transmission and local distribution are still considered natural monopolies and if the industry is restructured they remain under some sort of price regulation - (e.g. rate of return, price cap, yardstick or light handed.) Competition is encouraged by allowing others to use these facilities on a non-discriminatory basis by paying the regulated rate.