

36. Correct. The answer is false. In the 1950s the multinational oil companies paid taxes on posted prices. As new suppliers entered the market, market prices fell. Eventually the multinationals reduced posted prices, which reduced producing governments tax revenues. OPEC was formed to prevent lower tax revenues. It was not until more than a decade later that OPEC producers were able to take control over their domestic oil industry.