

4. Correct. The answer is true. Transaction economics identifies four models of market governance; in order of decreasing formality they are unified, trilateral, lateral and market. Unified governance is vertical integration, trilateral governance is long term contracts between two parties with a third party involved to ensure contract enforcement, bilateral governance is long term contracts between two parties, and market governance is the spot market with contracting over time.