

36. Correct. The answer is false. On-system gas is gas that is sold to the final customer by the company delivering the gas typically a local distribution company. Whereas off-system gas is gas sold to the final customer by a company not making the final delivery. Large industrial, commercial, and electricity generators or more likely to take off-system gas than residential and other small customers.