

39. Correct. The answer is false. Market governance is appropriate when there are recurring transactions involving non-specific assets, regardless of frequency, when there are alternative trading partners available. Specific assets may require more formal governance.