

6. Correct. The answer is false. Pollution is called an externality because it is a cost generated by an economic agent, which causes a loss of welfare to another external economic agent.