

9. Correct. The answer is true. In his seminal article 'The Problem of Social Cost' (1960) Coase noted that with a small number of participants, well defined property rights, and no transaction costs, an optimal level of pollution should be arrived at by bargaining between the polluter and the sufferer, no matter who had the original property rights.