

11. Correct. The answer is false. Having the victims or the government pay to reduce pollution should in principle get us to a social optimum. However, victims are usually a much more diverse group than the polluters. Even though collecting fees from them may involve higher transaction costs, having the polluter pay is more likely to get us to an optimum.