

12. Correct. The answer is true. For a uniform pollution regulation to be optimal, costs and benefits must be the same for all regions. However in many cases, it is unlikely that abatement costs-benefits are the same for all regions. Uniform pollution regulations may be economically inefficient, but varying regulations across regions may be politically difficult.