

40. Correct. The answer is true. Negative externality leads to inefficient production allocation. In this case marginal social costs are higher (due to impact of externality) than marginal private costs (private person does not take into account externality). As a result, private market tends to overproduce the good.

