

11. Correct. The answer is false. Each consumer has an indefinite number of indifference curves, each one representing a different utility level.