

7. Correct. The answer is true. A more open minded culture takes in external information and considers other points of view. A more closed minded culture filters out a wider range of external information, particularly if it does not agree with their preconceived notions. Examples of more closed minded cultures include the U.S. and all theocratic societies, which are ruled by religion.