

12. Correct. The answer is true. At the verbal level of communication there are three components - "What you say?" "What you mean?" and "What the listener understands?" What is said may be interpreted differently in two cultures because of differences in meanings of words across cultures as well as different body language and cultural nuances.