

14. Incorrect. The answer is true not false. With recent mergers, privatization, and an increase in the number of international companies, there is a need to adapt to other cultures. Three important aspects of corporate cultures are the following:

- the relationship between employees and their organization or how employees view the organization and their place in it.
- the relationship between superiors and subordinates.
- whether the organization is person or task oriented.

These relationships affect how an organization thinks, learns, changes, motivates, rewards, and resolves conflicts.